

An excellent way to keep up good morale in your legion is to be grateful towards them. Learn to thank all your new subscribers. Ensure that your words make a positive impact on a viewer's day in a way that they won't get elsewhere. That, and that alone, is how you make them come back every time for more.

Grateful gaming brands almost always perform the best as far as the final numbers on your bank statement, are concerned.

Image Credits: Unsplash

One way to identify the right streaming platform for you is by figuring out where your target audience spends time the most.

Boss Mode 105: Own Your Pond

There's an explosion of live-streaming platforms and leaderboards in the world wide web today, with Facebook Gaming, Twitch, and YouTube leading the pack. You must be diligent in identifying the right platform for your streaming exploits. The most important step in this process is to figure out where your audience, that is, your key demographic, hangs out the most.

If you're in the habit of destroying titles that others share a penchant for on FB Gaming, then set up camp in the blue league, and establish your consistency, brand, gratefulness, among other priorities. But if you have been silently biding your time on YouTube, honing your craft and building alumni for your brand, then most definitely go red.