

guage the audience is most comfortable with. We already have plenty of English-streams and vernacular streams is the next big thing. You can make the most out of your narrative by using the audience's first language and even have a separate English stream on the side. You'll need to figure out what your audience likes.

- Master the content- Robotically streaming and narrating each and every thing you do can be a little too much. Mix things up and read the chat. If your audience does not like what you do, switch it up. A little silence during key moments of the game is actually better. Don't talk over cut scenes in games. Pause if you want to, and then talk. Think of all the things that you find irritating while talking to people and avoid doing all that.

Keep the ball rolling

- Streamline the process- Your doubt can become your worst enemy, so do not stand up to entirely represent your idea. Make sure to analyse audience preferences and give them a feeling that they are here on your channel for a reason.

Ways to make your content highly interactive

It can be difficult for your platform to hold the audience's attention throughout the length of your content. An interactive content, presentation, or a lengthy discussion is more likely to grab your audience's attention, and there are few simple ways to get it done. This segment explores