Talk to your audience

multiple effective strategies that can keep your audience involved with your content.

Plan your audience perspective

Before working on the content, you can plan the perspective of your potential audiences. For example, ask questions like-

- What are the exciting parts of my content?
- How much does the audience know about my content? What should I target?
- Which group of gamers are most likely to be interested in my content?
- What is the size of your audience?

You can get this done by searching the analytics of your channel and sifting through the data.

Use an easy to follow structure

While developing your content, focus on giving it a simple and easy to understand audience's structure. You can start by introducing your stream's schedule and then elaborate on various aspects of it in detail. Draw some timelines and mention any live collaborations that you may have planned.

Immediately involve the audience

Your audience will come right away to your channel if you have set up notifications and updates going out on your Twitter and Facebook pages. Make sure to put out updates in advance as well as right when you're about to commence a stream.
