

Through these steps, your new server has been created. You will automatically be connected to this server after you have created it. Since there are no people or channels currently, you will see options to invite people and create channels. You can also access the server settings, notification settings, or privacy settings before inviting people. Initially, your server is online, public, and accessible to everybody unless you change this option.

Copyright attribution: How-to Geek

Creating and joining servers

Creating your first channel

Once you have created your Discord server, you need to create the channels that will be a part of this server. It is on these channels that all the conversations concerning the topic of your server are going to take place. Each channel can have a different program or category. However, many owners prefer to first create a Welcome channel with all new members of the channel invited to join. This will allow all users to enter a common channel before they are allotted channels according to topic or category.

Let's say this Welcome channel has only one message that all users are supposed to read. New users will be introduced to your server through this message and will not be able to respond to it or write anything further. To