

do so, you can go to Create Channel on the list of channels. This probably already contains the general channel. Here, you can select the channel type to be Announcement and enter the name of the channel. Now, you can select create channel, and your channel will have been created.

Here, you can now select your channel settings. In the settings, you will see three main options – Overview, Instant Invites, and Permissions. Let us start with Permissions.

Copyright attribution: Discord

Setting permissions in channels

Since users of this channel are not to be allowed any more freedom than to read messages, you can cross out all other permissions apart from Read Messages.

In the general channel, if you do not wish for new users to be able to read chats from approved users, you can go to the Permissions section and turn off the Read Messages permission with the roles set to Everyone.

Roles

Roles may be considered as duties that you assign to individual members of your server. Each of these roles comes with an elevated set of permissions and responsibilities that these members are expected to fulfill. The permissions granted to different roles can be customised and changed by