

6. Integrations: The Integrations option allows you to manage all the bots you subscribe to and the channel that you are following. In addition, you can also manage the webhooks in your server and any external integrations that you have included in your server. For access to this option, you require permission to Manage Webhooks.
7. Members: The members option allows you to carry out specific actions related to your server's individual members. However, the actions that you can carry out depend significantly on the permissions that you have. If you have the permission to view Server Settings but no other specific permissions from among the ones mentioned ahead, you can browse through the list of members. If you have permission to Manage Roles, you can create, delete, edit, reorder, or reassign roles from this option as well. If you have permission to Kick or Ban members, you can also perform these activities here. There is further explanation about these activities ahead.
8. Invites: Using the Invites option, you can view and delete invites to your Discord server. This can be done along with the creator of the invite and the number of uses that allows for an invite and its expiration time, if any.

Member options

Member options make it possible for you to manage individual members as well as groups of members in your Discord server in significantly more detail than the Members option in server settings.

You can go to member options by clicking on an individual user's name anywhere on the channel. Do be wary that this only takes you to the options for that particular member. To get to the same menu on mobile, tap the name

Server Settings in Discord