

4. Roles: Just as in the server setting, member options also allow you to set roles for members, as well as to reassign, delete, and reorder these roles. This requires the Manage Roles permission.

Voice options

Using the voice options provided by Discord, you can manage members and conversations in the voice channels of your server. To access voice options on the desktop, click the name of the user at any location on the server. If the server is in a voice channel, you will see Voice Options for the individual user. To do the same on mobile, you can tap the name of the user at any location on the server. From the options that appear, you can choose Voice Options.

Here are the most integral from among the Voice Options.

1. Server Mute: Using the server mute option, you can prevent a particular user's voice from being transmitted to the voice channel. This way, other users will not be able to hear this user speak. To avail of this option, you need to have permission to Mute Members.
2. Server Deafen: When you deafen a particular user, this user cannot hear the voice channel's conversation. For this, you need permission from Deafen Members.
3. Disconnect: If you are looking to remove members from a voice channel, you can use the Disconnect option. However, this does not permanently remove them from the channel. Unless there is permission to prevent them from rejoining the voice channel, they can do so seamlessly. To Disconnect members, you need the Move Members permission.
4. Move To: This option allows you to move a member between voice channels regardless of whether they have permissions to access these channels. They can also move to another channel unless there is a lack of permissions that allow them to do so. To carry out these actions, you need the Move Members permission.

Message options

Using Message Options on Discord, you can manage a specific message or group of messages on your server.

To access Message Options on the desktop, you can right-click anywhere on the message. Alternatively, you can hover your mouse over a message and click on the three dots that appear. To access Message Options on mobile, all you need to do is press and hold a message.

Here are the main Message Options you can access.
