

COD, then Discord is the application you are looking for. The first thing to get started with all the fun is to create a Discord account. Once you successfully create an account, you will be able to choose to run it on a browser or to install an application. If you are looking to run a server, then you will have to download the application, because this function is yet to be bug-free on the browser.

The application also allows the user to enjoy several customisation options. Once you are done with the setup, you can join an existing server with the help of an invitation code, or create your own server and send out the invitation code to your friends. Moreover, if you are considering creating a server of your own, make sure that you input a valid server name. That's all it requires. You don't have to install anything else, apart from the application. Unfortunately, the designers still have to integrate the feature where a person can browse for servers to join the app itself. On the other hand, it is very easy to join any active community. To help you find a good server to join, you can simply search for it online.

Here are some generic tips that can help you understand what should or shouldn't be done for a better gaming experience.

- Do not hoist roles like “owner” because it gives a poor impression on people who have joined your community. Rather, prefer hoisting roles that are a bit better, like “moderators.” Such names are gentle to the eyes, and it gives them the confidence to the other joiners to easily ping you if required. On the contrary, if you hoist the role as “owner”, it would hold a lot of joiners to ping you.
- Don't sell out points, levels, or experience (exps) because that would deteriorate your server. If you start giving exps or points for chatting, it will give the users a chance to earn points easily. This will make your server a “spam bin”, where people would chat not for enjoyment or for the sake of discussion, but for the points you have on offer. Your community and server will become better and engaging if people on your server enjoy talking and indulge in every conversation. So rather than selling out points, you can hold events and gaming sessions that will not just keep your community members happy, but give them a reason to stay.
- Another thing that you, being the owner, should keep in mind; the server should have only that many moderators as are required. For new owners, there is always a temptation to add more moderators as
