

that option off so that it does not create a completely new category. There are several colour options that you can choose from. Once you assign the roles as well as the colours, you will then see the names of those users in the same colour. This will help you distinguish the users from other members.

Copyright attribution: <https://miro.medium.com>

A community has to be engaging so that people don't leave and you are able to hold them for long.

The way you choose and assign the colours to different users, similarly, you can assign permission to selective people. For instance, you can create a “server administrator” as a role and give it to selective people (those who you want to give) instead of giving it to all. But once you have done setting up the roles, you can simply right click and tick the box against their name to enable the assigned roles.

Organising a channel

You, being the admin, have to organise all the channels on your server. There are several channels on your server, and each one of them is organised into categories. Now to create a new category, all you need to do is right-click on the channel pane and give the “create channel” command.

Whenever you create a new channel, it becomes your first duty to assign a name to it, and also choose whether it should be a voice or a text channel. While creating a name, make sure that they do not contain any spaces or capital letters. As soon as you create any category, do not forget to name it. Here, while naming the category, you can give space and can also type