

to maintain contact with the moderator! Warm, detailed input is among the easiest ways to remember all of the moderator's diligent, mostly unrewarding job.

- Maintain a channel for informal discussions for the moderators, allowing them to discuss their preferences and to understand one another better. Holding a place of authority doesn't imply they can't have fun or chat about anything except the customer's current condition.
- Messaging is useful for bringing lengthy opinions out, but at the same time, motivating users to use voice and talk quite freely will help to maintain the moderators sociable and engaging with each other.

Allocating Resources

Now we'll go into how to use every other moderator's skills even more thoroughly. Based on the size of the server, a moderation team may range from a few employees of a small server to a large team of 30 or more personnel. The larger your group expands, the better structured the group must become. Although they are both moderators, this does not indicate that they all share similar duties.

Copyright attribution: Photo by Tim Cooper is licensed under CC BY-NC-SA

Allocating Resources

A few of your moderators, especially the more seasoned ones, are likely to occupy entirely managerial roles. They prefer to step away from the local day-to-day network moderation, while younger admins are more centred on tracking interactions and following database laws. If you've had a few of these bigger mod teams, we recommend appointing individual mods