

Copyright attribution: Photo by Bridget Willard is licensed under CC BY-NC-SA

How to manage moderator burnout

Signs

- One of the most typical causes of moderator burnout is finding yourself becoming weaker and weaker whenever it gets too moderate, as well as less involved in the database itself.
- As a moderator, you've started to feel like moderating the database is a hassle; something you feel compelled to do, aware it has to be accomplished but with little pleasure connected to the job at hand.
- Once you're moderating, time appears to flow too slowly when you're continuously looking at the clock, praying that a minute of your energy is sufficient to be on the database.
- Your hours wasted on your server diminishes over time until you have already stepped aside or totally removed yourself from any activity in the server, moderation or otherwise.

Copyright attribution: Photo by anonymous is licensed under CC BY-NC-SA

Signs

How to avoid it?

After examining the symptoms of moderator burnout, it is important to learn how to stop it so that you and your colleagues can rediscover your rhythm and understand exactly how it would be to love being a moderator and a fulfilled person. All in moderation is safe, even, well, moderation. Knowing where you need rest and allowing yourself as well as other members to