

take them will significantly reduce anxiety. Moderating has a negative effect on the brain, but taking a break to regain your pulse will help restore your concentration.

Copyright attribution: Photo by Fleur Heesen is licensed under CC BY-NC-SA

How to avoid it?

Look out to more staff members who can assist with moderator roles and shoulder the burden so that those facing burnout can feel comfortable stepping away. Being on a team entails becoming open and straightforward with one another, even though things seem to be going well and when they aren't. You might be shocked by how willing your teammates are to support you while you're down. Note, you're never alone with this, but enjoy your breaks knowing that the database isn't on flames because there are eyes different to yours to share the burden. Offline life and general wellbeing can still take priority over every part of online life.

Moderator Guidelines

A moderation guidelines channel is meaningful for familiarizing the moderators both with the procedural and more contextual elements of moderation. Moderators must be mindful that they will be setting a positive precedent and therefore should keep themselves to an advanced rank such that all people are motivated to follow suit. This would encourage them to conduct their duties more smoothly and easily de-escalate tensions until they become a problem, promoting a supportive server community. Finally, by allowing the admins to analyze circumstances objectively, you can get mods that recognize when both users can be quickly disciplined