

server and participate in your events actively. To become a Discord partner, all you have to do is apply online through the platform and wait until the community approves you as a partner. If you have a strong social media presence, then the journey can get a little easier for you.

Discord nitro

Copyright attribution: <https://www.howtogeek.com>

How to get Discord verification upon qualifying for the same to make the server official

In order to get verified on Discord, you will be required to be a game developer, professional esports team, Spotify-verified musical artist, or a game publisher. For qualifying, you will be required to be the official representative of your group or an individual applying for the Discord verification and a server owner.

If you fail to be in either of these categories, you can consider becoming a Discord partner. It is another sort of Discord verification. On social media platforms, verification is mostly used to offer an identity to users when they are semi-famous.

At this moment, Discord verification is restricted to game developers and publishers having a huge amount of monthly users. If you are a content creator on YouTube, Twitch, Mixer, or Reddit platform, you can consider applying to become a Discord partner as another account verification method.

Users who fit into the applicant categories are essentially required to be the owner of the server and the official representative of their group or team that is applying for the same.

If you do not belong to any of these categories, you cannot verify Discord. However, if you meet all the criteria as mentioned above, then you will be required to:

- Visit the official platform and click on the 'Apply Now' bottom of your screen.
- The applicants will then be required to offer an associated email address and any information that can justify their identity.
- If you have major verification concerns, then you can contact Discord at their official email address.