

Alfred

Alfred is an app that helps you locate files on your Mac. It's essentially a keyboard launcher that enables you to search for everything you can think of with a single keystroke. While it excels at locating hidden files even in the most complex folder structures, it also functions as a text expander, performs system commands, stores clipboard history, controls your music, and much more.

Alfred is free in its basic form, but you can upgrade to a Powerpack, which includes Alfred workflows – the ability to create custom actions that involve several applications. The free version is excellent. Alfred allows users to rapidly access online pages and provide parameters to websites with regularly formatted URLs. Alfred for Mac is subjected to the same tests as any other program, and if you're using macOS Catalina or Big Sur, the system's Gatekeeper will confirm that the Alfred app meets all verified developer requirements. Alfred is a fantastic productivity tool for Mac.

App/site link: <https://www.alfredapp.com/>