

Cons:

- The hardware support for this Linux distros is very low.

2. Red Hat Enterprise Linux

The Red Hat Enterprise Linux is also an open-source distro that was created by Red Hat. The primary application of such a server was to be used by commercial industries.

https://encrypted-tbn0.gstatic.com/images?q=tbn:ANd9GcS8zpM6iWzQQDE8bgi-5JqF50nR3bYz_9vysqyUkEx8lGefZ5Aq5jWNrBj2X7w048&usqp=CAU

Pros:

- It is one of the most secure Linux distros.
- It supports all kinds of data analysis software such as IoT, containers, and cloud storage services.
- It allows the user to have the most advanced enterprise software.

Cons:

- The Red Hat Enterprise Linux provides services only on a purchase basis. There are no free applications or support that come along with these Linux distros.

3. SUSE Linux Enterprise Server

The SUSE Linux Enterprise Server is also an open-source platform that is built by SUSE. It is one of the most stable servers which provides high security.

Pros:

- Provides better functioning and power to cloud servers.
- Provides better support to all the cloud servers that have enhanced visualization.

Cons:

- It only runs on modern environments that are developed for ARM systems.

4. CentOS Linux Server

It is also a Linux distro that is developed by the Red Hat Enterprise Linux.