

41. cal

This command will simply show the calendar in the terminal of your screen.

42. wget

It helps in downloading things from all the connected networks or the internet.

43. ping

This will help in utilising the 'ping websites' functions and also help in pinging the other devices.

44. ftp

The ftp function means file transfer protocol. It is a self-explanatory command. It helps in transferring files from one system to another easily.

45. ssh

The full form of this command is, secure shell and it is used to log into any remote server or system. This is also one of the preinstalled programs of Ubuntu.

46. fdisk

It executes all the manipulation tasks and this command also works fine when it comes to partition of a system. Make sure that you are aware of all the consequences before executing this task.

47. df

Whichever storage drive is connected to your system, this command will access that and show you the free and used storage stats.

48. chmod

This command is another very useful one as it helps in changing the file permission for the beginners. And this command stands for a change of mode in Linux.

49. chown

This is a very important command as it can change the owner of a file and even a directory. So, be very sure before using this command.