

We looked at the 3 major panels earlier namely the Composition panel, the Projects panel and the Timeline panel. In addition to this, we also saw the Effect Controls panel and the Render Queue panel. There are also a couple more panels which can be viewed in the following way:

Click → Window → Workspace → All Panels

This will display one new panel on the right and one new panel top which looks more like a toolbar than a panel.

It's evident from the first glance that this layout is slightly different from the ones we've been dealing with thus far. The 2 new panels in the Adobe After Effects are: Tools panel (in the top left of the window) and the Work panels (right side of the screen)

1) The timeline panel

As we have seen in the previous section, each element is present on the timeline panel as a separate layer. Next to each layer name, on its left, is an icon which is used to identify what type of data file it is. On the right side, we have the time bars which signify the start, stop and duration of each layer. On top of this is the complete duration of the video identified by the 2 blue markers at the start and finish respectively.

1. Total duration of the video 2. File type 3. Toggle views 4. Zoom bar
