

by default only the element name, type and video info are visible. By right-clicking on the headings under the panel, you can either choose to hide some of the visible columns or add a bunch of other columns for easy viewing of information you might need like size, frame rate, media start, media end, media duration, in and out points, tape name, comment, file path and date.

The elements are neatly organised and they can be moved around and put in folders quite easily. At the bottom left of the Project panel (see image), there's a folder icon which you can use to create a new folder. Once you do that, you can neatly throw similar items together based on your preferences – you can either group similar items or throw items in the same layer together. In the same row, the right most icon is the bin icon which you can use to delete stuff.

IMPORTING

There are 2 ways to import elements into a project in After Effects:

A more in-depth view of the projects panel

1. Selected elements are displayed as a thumbnail at the top of the project panel. To the right of the thumbnail are certain technical specifications of the element for a quick glance. Audio signatures are also visible below the thumbnail (provided they exist) 2. The project panel can be expanded by resizing and more columns can be added to get more details about each element. 3. Create New folder icon 4. Bin icon
