

Pre-composing in After Effects

This little feature gives the user a massive productivity gain

Pre-composing is a very cool productivity hack that you can use to uncomplicate your workflow. This will group together multiple layers as one composition and instead of performing bulk functions on all the layers, you only need to modify one.

To pre-compose a composition, all you need to do is to select all the layers you want to combine as one composition (if this are serially arranged, the you can select all by clicking one of the layers on the end, holding Shift and selecting the layer at the other end. If they are individual elements, then you can select them by clicking on the elements while pressing the Ctrl button)
