

Deploy the sentry

As famously ineffective most of them are, certain antivirus programs do help a lot in acting as the first line of defence if your computer or mobile is breached by a malicious piece of code or program. And, if configured correctly and left to do their job without much interference, it can also remove most threats that might already be present in your computer systems or mobile phones. Make sure that the virus definitions of the antivirus software are updated and invest in a premium subscription of software like Malwarebytes, which has a demonstrated history of providing protection against viruses and other malicious attempts to steal data and get access to the system too.

Clear the cache and don't have too many cookies

Cache and cookies act as the identifier for the websites and services and might aid them in profiling you. Make sure that you clear both these from the browser of your computers and mobiles, to make sure that the websites have a hard time in identifying you the next time you visit them. Doing this can also help in removing the possibility to a large extent that airline websites and other portals with a dynamic pricing

Jumble the words and lock them up