Keep your money and financial records safe

As the world locked down post the pandemic outbreak, the monetary transactions, which used to be done in many cases through banknotes and coins shifted to becoming numbers that appeared on screens. This meant that the people on the internet, with fraudulent intent had more opportunities to conduct nefarious activities. In 2020 itself, over 30,000 cybercrime cases related to just fraud were reported across the country, ranging from monetary scams to identity cloning and sending and receiving fake information, which led to data leaks. Here again, all hope is not lost and there are ways, using which, you can reduce damage if it happens and, in most
