

Teach them the good stuff

made every second. And, for the young ones who are still trying to find their footing in the online world, it is more common than ever to step in a pothole and land all their information in the hands of an exploitative scavenger on the internet. For them, it is hard to navigate the internet itself, and we cannot expect them to be updated with all the changes and exploits that are making their way into the mainstream. That is why, it should be the responsibility of the parents and teachers, to stay updated. There can be children specific security plans that can be created using the methods mentioned previously and can be implemented to not only protect the children but also make them aware of the perils of the world of the internet which they are about to step in or are on the footsteps of.

2. Teach the kids the good and the bad of internet speech

Some of us learned the hard way about the impact a social media or internet forums can have on us and others. But it should be made clear that the children who are about to go into this jungle of opinions and thoughts, are able to regulate their own thoughts and ideas in a better way than the generation prior to them did. Someone who is new to the concept of forums might not know the effect of a joke that they made without putting much thought could have on the person who is on the other side of the screen, at
