

place where that advice would come in handy. Whether at an ATM or a shopping mall, whenever you are entering your pin, make sure that you put your other hand to use, and hide it. It may seem awkward, but hey, a bit of awkwardness is better than an empty bank account.

3. Choose your ATM wisely: ATMs at public places and under proper vigilance, are much much less prone to tampering and thus, the chances of you getting stripped of your information gets very less. So, make sure the ATM that you are using is preferably in a public place and has a decent looking security system.
4. Let the alerts be on: One of the biggest ways to prevent being robbed of all your money is by enabling SMS or any other form of alerts from your bank which come in when you withdraw money. The way that this helps is that they intimate you immediately in a case where you may have fallen prey to a card skimming attempt and your bank account had unauthorized transactions carried out. This would enable you to lodge a complaint as soon as possible, making sure your bank and the authorities have enough time in hand, before the stolen money has been siphoned off to a rat's nest of bank accounts which are nearly impossible to track.
