

Parting Advice

Some final words before we leave,
after that, it's you and your data.

Now that you have read through 90 odd pages of us telling you how not to get defrauded off your information while online, and make sure that you leave no trace behind, some things still remain unsaid. So, read on and power through this final mile, and make the internet, somewhat of a safe haven for your precious information.

Beware of the links you click

One of the most common ways of misguiding people and taking them to a different place, where the scammers can strip you off your personal information and, in some cases, that may cost you money, is by sending you links that look awfully simple, but are, for the lack of a better word, spiked. Let us explain.
