

- Obtain a piece of paper as well as a pen. Make sure the paper isn't too small; you'll need enough space to write your ideas.
- In the centre of the page, draw an oval.
- Fill in the oval with a topic that is as broad as possible. Begin with the assignment of your chosen topic.
- Draw lines from the oval all the way to the paper's edges.
- Connect each of these lines with smaller ovals.
- Write more particular ideas/topics connected to the central oval inside the smaller ovals.
- Repeat until you've come up with a total of 3-5 topic suggestions.

What a mind map might end up looking like

Obviously, mind maps can be a lot more complex but to start off your research, you can always employ the simple methods. And the steps mentioned above will definitely help you out.

Read the chapter about making mind maps to gain a better understanding and to learn more tricks to add more information to your mind map..

2. Make it specific

Once you've come up with a list of 3-5 ideas or topics or themes. They're all quite broad, so you'll have to narrow them down to one that you can research thoroughly. Otherwise, you will end up wasting a lot of your time.