

them from memory. If not, reread the material (as many times as necessary), but do not proceed to the next section unless you can recite the preceding section's responses.

5. Review

Refine your brain organisation and begin the process of memory development. After completing the chapter using the preceding methods, review the questions you created for each heading. Determine whether you are still capable of responding to them. If not, rewind and refresh your memory before proceeding.

That's about it. If at all there's only one chapter you wish to read in this FastTrack, then this should be it. It gives you a brief overview of the entire process of researching and if you're really interested to know more about each of the steps we've discussed in this chapter, then proceed to the next chapters. 