

most likely report your findings in a written report, on a display board, or during a presentation during the event. If you're a scientist, you can publish your findings in a scientific journal or present them to your peers. Also, you might give folks in the pest control business a run for their money.

Once your peers start reviewing your work, more data will be generated around your research and that might even lead to even more interesting findings. The world of science evolves in this fascinating manner. Congratulations! You're a scientist, of sorts!
