

digital collections of historical documents, images, maps, and music, as well as a law library and information on US Copyright. Importantly, you can seek aid from a human librarian who can assist you in finding certain sources or information.

Project Gutenberg

It is the world's oldest digital library, with over 60000 electronic books in dozens of languages, available in plain text, HTML, PDF, ePub, or MOBI formats, or for on-site reading. One of the most distinguishing features of this resource is that it is and has always been completely free. It could be quite useful for students who need to deal with one or more original publications, particularly those studying humanities subjects such as literature, philosophy, and history.

Free everything

Artcyclopedia

This is a fine art database with over 160000 connections that lists 9000 artists and indexes 2900 art sites. It allows you to search for artworks by title, artist name, or the museum that houses the piece, as well as view artists by nationality, medium, theme, and more. As a result, this is a comprehensive and extremely useful resource for visual arts students.

Internet History Sourcebooks Project

Maps, papers, photographs, secondary sources, bibliographies, and music