

Customising the notification shade

Now that we're done with adding utilities and maximising our productivity with the notification shade, let's get on to changing the notification shade completely. Yes, you read that right. You can even replace your stock notification shade with a material and a beautiful looking one and there's nothing stopping you from doing that. This section of the chapter will especially be helpful to the people with MI / Oppo / Vivo phones because, in our opinion, their notification shades are far from minimal and beautiful. So, let's get customising!

Power Shade

Power Shade is one of those apps that we share a love-hate relationship with. On one hand - it is an incredibly customisable and powerful tool to replace your default notification shade but on the other hand, a quarter of the stuff is locked behind a pay-wall and there are just too many ads in the app. Now, getting our relationship status out of the way, Power Shade is a really good way to completely change the look of your notification shade.

Firstly, install the app from the Google Play Store. When you open it, you'll see that the app is asking for some permissions. Here's the part
