

packs have different variations of an icon for the same app. Since you can customise icons of your device on a per-app basis, even after you apply an icon pack and you don't like the look of one particular app, you can just change it to another variation or use an icon from another icon pack. Now, the only prerequisite for an icon pack to be applied is the presence of a Launcher. If you haven't read the previous chapter about Launchers and how you can change your stock home screen, we recommend you read it first. The reason you'll need a launcher is that most of the stock launchers (the Launcher that comes pre-installed in your phone) don't have the support for external icon packs. As of right now, almost all of the third-party launchers such as Nova, Lawnchair, Hyperion, etc. have support for icon packs. We'll be using Lawnchair for this one because it's simple and gets the job done but you can use the launcher of your preference.

How to apply an icon pack

Icon packs can be installed just as regular apps. You go to the Google Play Store, find an icon pack of your liking and install it. Here's where our paths may differ. We're using Lawnchair so this paragraph will be Lawnchair specific but usually, the option to apply icon packs will be in the "Icons" section of the Launcher settings. Even if you cannot find the "Icons" menu, most Launcher settings offer a search option. So, you can just search for it that way.
