

tries to access a particular message in the Finance tab, it'll ask for your fingerprint. If the app recognises it, only then the app will show the balance and the transactions for the particular section.

The last tab is different from all the other tabs. The “Offers” tab will scrape the web and give you various coupon codes for different apps. You can copy any coupon code easily, even without opening the actual message itself by tapping “Tap To Copy” and you can even choose to show only SMS. This will remove all the coupons that Microsoft has scraped from the web and only show the coupons which were sent to you via SMS.

It can also sort the offers either by category or by brand name which you can see on the top of the screen.

From a messaging perspective, the app offers a very clean and minimalistic experience. The only thing that has been implemented differently while messaging someone is the ability to schedule a message. Open a chat with someone .

Just above the textbox where you'll write your text, you will see a range of predefined replies. These are your quick replies and can be changed in the Settings. Now, in the same place, if you see besides the “attach” icon, there will be a calendar icon. Tap on that and a calendar will pop up. You can set the date and time to your liking and then just type out the message that you want to be sent.

Now, simply press the send button and the message will be automatically sent at the given date and time.

All in all, the Microsoft SMS Organizer is a really good app for anyone who wants to declutter their SMS inbox. It comes with this powerful sorting algorithm and even the feature to directly copy the OTP from the notification as and when it arrives. We liked the app so much that we even installed it on our personal devices and we will be using it as our default messaging app. We highly recommend you to check the app out, you definitely will not be disappointed by it. d
