All of Google in one place

Google Docs

Google Docs, Sheets, and Slides should be your first stop if you work collaboratively or switch between PC and Mac. These three essential tools are accessible as mobile apps for Apple and Android devices and work easily in any online browser.

Although Google's free office suite lacks the advanced tools found in desktop software, everything is laid out in a clear, logical manner. The main problem of Docs, Sheets, and Slides is that it's difficult to open files written with other office software, and file formatting isn't usually transformed correctly. Furthermore, Google Docs has numerous peculiarities that make it less user-friendly than competing office products. It accomplishes the job well as free software, but as a subscription solution, it trails below Microsoft 365.

Zoho Workplace

While Google Docs is likely to be more frequently utilised due to the strength of its brand, Zoho Workplace is excellent in its own right. It's certainly closer to a desktop office suite.

Zoho's new-look word processor is well-presented and capable of producing professional-looking documents, and it comes with a solid spreadsheet and a
