

Music production 101

Start writing some good foot-tapping music

The only rule that applies in the world of making music today is that there are no rules. You can sample anything you record, so long as it meets the requirements. Automate effects in ways that were not previously imaginable. Blending different rhythms and styles of music together can result in the production of beats and melodies that push musical boundaries and give rise to entirely new subgenres.

However, just because you have the ability to do anything in the realm of music does not mean that you necessarily should.