

This means that you will already have the music playing for your show's entrance and outro, as well as space for advertising spots and tracks for your voice or an interviewee's voice, when you start the show.

It is important to keep in mind that the appearance of this will vary depending on the structure of the episode; develop a podcast template that meets your needs. Here's an extremely simple one:

Using a template helps you retain most of the tuning that you have already done for a vast number of things. This way you don't have to go around reinventing the wheel every episode that you upload.

This will also ensure that any effects, such as compression, EQ, or anything else, that you have applied to the recordings are preserved.

Record Your First Episode

Solo

If you're just recording a solo episode or want to record an intro to an interview you completed, all you need to do is select the track you want to record to (see