

Upload Your First Episode

When carried out with Buzzsprout, this procedure is reduced to its barest essentials.

If this is not the case, you might need to fiddle with some settings, such as integrating ID3 tags into your MP3 file. This seems like it would be confusing and pointless, so let's not do that.

You will only need to select "Upload" from the drop-down menu and they will perform some magical processing on your MP3 file.

The next step is to provide the episode number, along with its title, description, and summary, as well as the date it was published.

Put a "1" in that space if you want to use the Seasons feature; otherwise, leave it blank. Make sure you check the "explicit" box if you tend to use a lot of curse words.

It is recommended that you develop a template for your episode description and save it as a separate text document so that you may reuse it for each episode. The format that you can use could be something like this:

1. Episode 01 - How to get started with your own blogpost
2. Link to article - (Only if you have one)
3. Like and share our podcast

Click the save button, then carry out this procedure for the initial publication of your episodes.

Launching a podcast with more than one episode is recommended to ensure that listeners are not need to wait in order to hear more content.
