

BLAST DOORS

What It Is

Blast Doors doesn't have a great storyline; at best, it's clichéd. Set in the 21st century, nations are thrown into a chaotic war for depleting resources. Enter Militech, a company touting the motto "Bigger guns for a brighter future", selling weapons to the highest bidders. Now if you have a problem with some other country, use Militech's weapons and wipe them off the world map. Who says wars cannot bring peace and that treaties help settle matters?

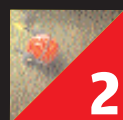

The game itself doesn't have anything to do with the story, literally, and it's just slapped in there for the sake of it. The goal of the game is simple—destroy your opponent by firing missiles at them in turns. It's reminiscent of classic cannon games where you set your angle and shoot at your enemy, except in Blast Doors the world is shown in 3D and you can also select bearing. Again, the fun here is in the number of players you can play with in a map—up to 8—carnage indeed.

Why It's Addictive

The game isn't just aim-and-shoot—you will be spending the majority of your time choosing weapons, shields and other accessories. Weapons, shields and upgrades are plentiful, and you can even design your own weapons. The more powerful items require more money and prestige, which is your entire reason for getting addicted. You will often find yourself choosing to play 250+ rounds, despite not really wanting to just to see what those elite weapons, that can cost 1000 prestige points, are made up of.

The ability to play with up to 8 players against the computer or your friends over the network adds to the overall fun and addiction the game has to offer. You simply won't get bored of this one. Blast Doors will stay etched on your desktop, for a long time.

BABO VIOLENT 2

What It Is

Babo Violent 2 is an action packed multiplayer game featuring support for up to 32 players, and no, all of 32 players won't be snoozing around trying to shoot slow missiles or spend half an hour camping. It'll be carnage, absolute carnage, with rapid firing machine-guns, chain guns, bazookas, dual machine guns, bouncing grenades and Molotov cocktails. You control a ball armed to the teeth from the top view with both your keyboard and mouse simultaneously. As you fire your weapons at your enemies, your player (the ball) will be bounced back because of the recoil thus requiring constant attention to both aim and movement. There's no shortage of maps to play in, either—you can choose up to 13 different maps to frag your opponents to smithereens.

Why It's Addictive

Babo Violent 2 is extremely fast paced, requiring constant attention to control your ball and frag your opponent in style. Imagine 32 players on a single map going crazy bouncing each other all over the map, there won't be any boring games to remember in Babo Violent 2. The three modes included with the game make sure you don't get bored playing only one game type—you can add in more variety by playing Free for all, Team Deathmatch or Capture The Flag with your friends. This game is well worth wasting your hours on; just be sure to stay away from it during your exams for the sake of your grades!

LITTLE FIGHTER 2

What It Is

You must remember the good old days of Street Fighter; how we miss bashing everyone's heads in spamming fireball after fireball with Ryu. This game fulfils all your retro desires, with more spice added to it. A fighting game to the core, it comes with ten different characters, each with their own style of fighting; the game lives up to its name...literally! The fighters are actually smaller than you would expect them to be, but that doesn't deter the amount of fun that Little Fighter 2 offers.

You have up to 10 different backgrounds to fight in and 5 game modes to choose from including the Versus mode, 1 vs. 1 championship, 2 vs. 2 championship, Battle mode and Stage mode. The Stage mode is something that gives the game a different feel to it, turning it into a side scrolling action game.

That's not all this small game has to offer, there's also the fact that in a single ring, you can have up to 8 different players and divided to up to four teams or independent, this makes it a must-play for a great multiplayer experience

The option of playing with up to 8 players, is why. There's nothing better than the surge of glory in seeing yourself as the last man standing after a long match. The items that are dropped randomly on the level, like rocks, bottles, boomerangs etc in the middle of a fight to pick up and throw at your enemies, adds to the fun and makes every game unpredictable thus the amount of repetitiveness is extremely low and the addictiveness bar is high. Oh and just in case you forget—the key to exiting the game is [Alt] + [F4], but we don't expect you to remember that anyway, especially when you are in the middle of a fight at 4 AM.
