

Sony Ericsson Z250i

Nokia throws punches and Sony Ericsson makes sure they return them with even more oomph. The Z250i is a sexy SE phone. With the cover of the clamshell design closed, you can see the icons on the back are there for a reason. They tell you things like if you have new mail or any missed calls, so you don't have to open the phone. The coolest part is the artwork on the metallic-finished cover. This isn't exactly a feature-packed, power-user kind of phone; it's more for the style-conscious younger folks. They won't have to wait too long—the Z250i should be out this quarter. The phones will be available in two colour schemes that Sony Ericsson likes to call "Silent" White and "Silent" Black. No statement on price so far.

Nokia 7900

The Nokia design department has gone extreme with the introduction of their new 7900—and its little brother, the 7500. The 7900 has jagged edges and cuts everywhere, which give it a unique look—as you can see. The surface has been etched, and you should be able to choose from 49 colours that can be used to light up the keypad. There's a whole gigabyte of space on this baby to store your 2MP images taken from its camera. There's a 16 million colour OLED screen to preview your dear photos on. Perks include wallpapers that change their appearance as time passes by, and with changes in battery and signal strength. The phone should be out by the final quarter of the year, with a rumoured price of around 400 (Rs 22,000).
