

Funtrak Paintball Panzer

Every shoot-em-up gamer loves paintball games—it's the only way you can have the fun of gun-toting without the un-fun risk of death. War-game lovers, computer gamers or not, want added firepower when paintballing, too. Then there's just the lazy people who want to play war games but hate the idea of all that walking, running and ducking about. Say hello to the Funtrak Paintball Panzer. This is a custom-built, mini panzer tank (yes, the WW II, German killing-machine type); it has a roll cage, a rather large paintball gun that can shoot paint-filled projectiles at over 200 kmph—while being driven! This tank will have you mimicking The Terminator and yelling “I’ll be back” on the war games battlefield. Of course there are those who prefer laser tag to paintball games—lasers are safer, since paintballs can accidentally kill dogs and old people, and cause bad bruises—and there’s a laser version available too. Price? Almost Rs 6 lakh. Not at all steep considering it will let you brag about being the only Indian with an actual tank at home!

Droolmaal

The good stuff

InPhase Tapestry Holographic Storage

You’ve read about holographic storage quite a few times in Digit. And here it is: you can now go out and buy your own holographic storage drive and media! (Provided you have a seven-figure income!) The InPhase Tapestry drive and media use holographic storage to give you (currently) 300 GB per HVD (Holographic Versatile Disc), which can be written at 20 MBps. InPhase has promised to increase this to 1.6 TB per HVD, with transfer rates of 120 MBps, in under four years. For now, though, you will have to make do with 300 GB discs, which cost $180 each (Rs 7,300). At least you’ll have all your movies on a single disc! The drive, however, is a different matter altogether: and costs $18,000

(over Rs 7 lakh)... we’ll leave it to you to decide if it’s worth it, but we can guess.

Sony HES-V1000 Home Entertainment Server

Blu-ray is here to stay, and you think it’s time you went out and bought yourself that player to be able to watch movies on Blu-ray discs. But why buy a player when you can buy an entertainment centre is what we always say...

Presenting the HES-V1000, Sony’s Blu-fix for entertainment junkies. We’ll let the feature-list say it all: 200 BD / DVD / CD changer, full 1080p HD output, 500 GB hard drive for even more storage (as if you need it), HDMI output, Dolby Digital and dts 5.1 audio, MP3 and JPEG playback, Ethernet port to connect to the Net for updates and media information, and even a Blu-ray disc burner so you can record on BDRs! It’s a steal for $3,500 (about Rs 1,40,000), so pre-order yours today!

