Z Launcher Home Screen

'Today' page Aviate Launcher

screen is a writing pad, so when you draw a letter on the screen, all apps and contacts containing that letter will be displayed on your home screen. What's more even keywords from your bookmarks and web history can be displayed. Apart from this, the main home page of the launcher displays six of your most frequently used apps that change according to your usage.

4 Yahoo Aviate Launcher

Aviate has been around for a while now. It adapts itself based on the time of the day, your location and your priorities, presenting to you the right apps and information right when you would need it. In terms of visual customisations, Aviate lets you choose between white, black and transparent themes along with the usual ability to change the icon pack. With Aviate, during your daily commute, the launcher will go into the 'Moving' profile or space as they call it, and present to you all the apps that you would generally use while commuting along with providing the traffic updates. Similarly adjustments happen for 'Home', 'Work' and 'Listening' profiles. Strangely, Aviate doesn't have an 'app drawer' icon. What's special is that when you swipe up from the dock, a small menu displays your favourite and recent contacts giving you the option to contact them just with a few taps.

5 Nova Launcher

Nova is one of the oldest, most downloaded, highly customizable, performance driven home screen replacements. This launcher by TeslaCoil Software is Android customization at its best.

Personalisation abilities that Nova offers are in abundance: don't like the app dock? You can remove it completely. Don't like the status bar? You can hide that too! Many of these features are not found on most other launchers.

Special mentions also to the ability to enable unread count badges which display a small notification icon over the app which has pending notifications (and it works for most of them which is rare). With the Nova Launcher, the Android home screen can metaphorically be the canvas of your Android UI dreams.

It's free to download on the Play Store, but some features such as Gestures, Unread counts, icon swipes, etc. require the Prime version (₹150).

6 EverythingMe Launcher

Like Yahoo's Aviate, this launcher too offers contextual information and app shortcuts depending on time, location and other preferences.

The layout of the home screen isn't a complicated at all. The main screen display auto-classified applications into folders which also open up as feeds. Which means that when you tap on a folder, say 'around me', the launcher will display useful location based applica-
