tions on your device and give you a view of your exact location with suggestions for nearby Points of Interest. This feature only works in few categories such as News (where local news is displayed in the feed) and Places. The other folders however are the usual folder style that also display app recommendations. Apart from these you can add your own apps and folders to the screen or can even add more screens. The other screen on a right-swipe is the 'quick contacts' screen.

A highlight feature is the Prediction Bar – the single row bar present right above the App Dock on the main home screen. This bar contains five icons which periodically change according to the user's activities. It may display your recent apps, your recent contacts or even the last image you clicked.

The various customizable options the launcher offers are folder styles, icon packs, gestures, daily wallpaper and the ability to toggle various sections of the default home screen layout. The app drawer here again is the traditional Jelly-bean type drawer with a horizontal layout.

The launcher learns and ups its usefulness but the UI isn't that visually appealing. It's free and hence worth a try.

7 Buzz Launcher

Buzz Launcher was awarded the best Brand Identity award by Red Dot. It's is a highly customisable launcher that works on the concept of sharing of themes designed by users.

'Homepacks', as these themes are called, are a new world in themselves. Each home screen layout theme (home-pack) is unique. What's special here is that you don't have to worry about downloading tons of other icon packs, widgets or wallpapers (like in other cases) to make your Android home screen look beautiful. All you need to do is go to the 'homepack buzz' screen which is an online display of the currently downloadable themes and take your pick. These themes are updated regularly adding to the collection of already present 800,000+ themes all of which are free and are very intelligently classified by genres and colours. The application icons, layout, colours, wall-papers and even the fonts come bundled with the 'homepack'. Not to forget once downloaded you can even play with the contents of the theme according to your taste.

The easier customization options, apart from the themes, that Buzz Launcher offers are: custom icon frames (for all your icons to look similar) and layout settings granular up to even the margins around an app icon and grid sizes. It's free, and a definite must-have (not just a mere must-try).

8 SF Launcher 2

Fond of material design? Well with this launcher you can transform your entire UI into cards. The top of your home screen displays the Google Search bar with a beautiful header image as the background in Google Now Style (just like your Google search app). The icons and the widgets are displayed below in a scrollable screen of cards depending on how the user wishes to display them. The App drawer in this launcher opens like your Google Apps options i.e. the regular swipe from the left of your screen covering half of your screen.

The customizable home settings the launcher offers are: ability to choose between various theme colours, lots of Header Images to choose from, header styles and the ability to hide the status bar too. You could even change the icon pack and other settings which get unlocked

TLDR READY RECKONER

You want the power to customize: Nova Launcher

Right from the basic icon packs, to the more complex home screen animations, and even custom swipe gestures – there is no absolute limit to what this launcher can let you do provided you're ready to give it time

If if want to make your phone look completely different: Buzz Launcher

The look and feel changes that each 'homepack' has to offer is phenomenal. It wouldn't be wrong to say that each theme in itself gives you the feel of a completely new launcher and to an extent a completely different phone.

If you prefer first things first: Yahoo Aviate Launcher

The ultra-useful "Today" page of the main home screen beautifully arranges important information such as weather, news and calendar entries right on the home screen along with apps and settings based on time and location.

If you're not fond of change: Google Now Launcher

Natively the default launcher for Nexus devices, it gives you the perfect blend of minimalist beauty with the best of stock Android features.
