

worldview

OUR PICK OF THE BEST TECH ARTICLES FROM AROUND THE GLOBE

(MUST READS)

GOOGLE'S NEXT BIG THING?

Google's Nest, formed by ex Apple employees that has been working on creating a smart home environment. Presenting you almost everything that you need to know about this potentially 'next big thing' by Google
<http://dgit.in/GglNest>

DRONE RACING LEAGUE

The drone racing league that is emerging as a trend is going to focus on delivering quality footage of the races. The pilots themselves will be getting a live feed from the camera mounted on their drone that will be directly streamed onto their goggles. Beat that F1!
<http://dgit.in/DroneRcng>

POWERFUL THAN A THERAPIST!

Researchers have developed a program that can predict relationship success or failure based on the algorithm and data it has been collecting after listening to conversation of couples' marriage therapy sessions.
<http://dgit.in/BtrTherapist>

SELFIE! SELFIE!

Now that we have your attention, we go through all the possible phases and aspects of a selfie, the revolutionary potential it has shown, an effort to answer why selfie lovers love it and why haters will be hating it, we bring you in seven chapters, the Selfie Encyclopedia.
<http://dgit.in/Selfiepdia>

[ArsTechnica Corner]

INTERNET: BY THE PEOPLE, FOR THE PEOPLE

In Orcas Island, lack of a reliable ISP leads to creation of a network by the locals for themselves. The network is powered by multiple radios hoisted on trees and houses, transferring signals across the water just to achieve modern high-speed broadband service. Crazy, isn't it?

<http://dgit.in/RadioNet>

Fall before fly?

Zano, an intelligent drone that also was one of the most funded European Kickstarter project ever bagging $3.4 million in just two months, just lost their CEO. How will they make it? What startup lessons does it teach?
<http://dgit.in/ZanoFall>

Inside the F1 tech centre

Love fast cars? Ever thought how those milliseconds are calculated with precision and how much data goes into processing on the day of the race? Want to see the tech that goes into all of this? Click on the link below:
<http://dgit.in/F1Tech>

New bartender in the house!

Inspired by Rumbot, a Russian hardware hacker has created a robot assistant named Alkomat that is able to mix five drinks at a time serving you the best. Made out of an inject printer, too, would you believe!
<http://dgit.in/RoboBartender>