

4 Skiplagged

Using a technique known as the 'hidden-city' rule, Skiplagged finds you cheap flights that other flight search apps can't (Airlines HATE this app!). Skiplagged exploits algorithms that determine fares by booking a flight which includes your desired destination as a stopping point. Once there, you simply hop off and "forget" to reboard. This fare can be up to 80 per cent cheaper than what you would have ended up paying for a direct flight.

5 Wakie

Waking up in the morning is probably the hardest part of our day, and no amount of sleep is going to change that. You know the drill - wake up confused to the sound of your alarm, snooze it while trying to steal a few precious minutes of sleep, only to wake up groggy with little time left for breakfast. Wakie is an app where you set the time you want to be woken up, and another user from across the globe will call you, in the hope that a conversation with a complete stranger will be stimulating enough to rouse you from your slumber. In addition to using it as an innovative alarm app, you can also use Wakie to have anonymous phone conversations about any topic - just select the topic you're interested in, and Wakie will match you with someone who's willing to talk (or listen).

6 BodBot

The easiest thing to do in the world is to come up with excuses to not get in shape. Be it a lack of time, resources or just laziness. None of them are valid when it comes to taking care of your body. BodBot is an all-in-one fitness trainer app, that will help you design a customized workout plan, whether you're just looking to lose some weight, improve your stamina, or build muscle. It adapts to your schedule, so you can use it effectively even if you've just got a few hours every week. You can set goals for yourself and track your progress as well. The app adapts your workout regime depending on your performance. The killer feature is a built in nutrition planner that provides detailed nutritional information, a meal plan in line with your fitness goals and a meal tracker to keep your calories in check.

7 Zombies, Run

Being chased down by zombies who're out for your blood isn't something new - after all, games like Temple Run shot to popularity on the back of this concept. But take the same concept, and adapt it to real life, and you've got quite a game going. Zombies, Run is a game that motivates you to run by chasing you with virtual zombies, and rewarding you with virtual supplies and weapons as you complete your tasks. Put on your earphones, and let the game talk you through a mission - you'll have to speed up if you're being chased, slow down to catch your breath, and you can even collect supplies along the way to build a base. You can even create your own missions if you have a specific type of workout in mind, or challenge your friends to a mission.

8 Unfk your habitat

A messy home impresses no one, and if you're looking to have some company over, a tidy room is going to make a great first impression. If you still need some reason to keep your surroundings clean, this app is for you. The app guides you using small intervals of time - 5, 10 or 15 minutes a day, to make sure your habitat remains clean. It goes into some interesting details, including doing the laundry, the dirty dishes, making your bed and even a section on "emergency cleaning" - for when you only have a few minutes to tidy up your place before an imminent visit. A fun aspect of the app is the "Challenge", where you're tasked with cleaning up traditionally messy areas of your house such as the front door, your shoe rack, your stash of unread letters and flyers, or your fridge, within a given time.
