

1 Indiaplaza.com

K Vaitheeswaran founded Indiaplaza.com in 1999. Launched as Fabmall.com, it was one of the first e-commerce websites in India, seeding $3 million between 2004 and 2011. In 2013, it decided to wind up due to severe lack of funds. Analysts say that the startup was ahead of its time, but later fell behind to adopt latest technology, especially COD. More info here: <http://dgit.in/IndPlza>

2 Guruji.com

Founded by IIT Delhi alumnus, Guruji.com was a search engine for the 'desi' users. With an initial seeding of Rs.322 million in 2006, Guruji went on to add several search features like news, images, movies etc., out of which the music search received the most popularity.

Later, the music search got sued for providing pirated music content, which went on to become the reason for its shutdown.

3 BagsKart, JewelsKart and WatchKart

Founded in 2008, Valyoo technologies started its '4 sites - 1 cart' model with JewelsKart, WatchKart, BagsKart and LensKart portals.

But, due to severe traction and financial crisis, it decided to shut down everything except LensKart.

4 Lumos

Closing its shutters in less than a year, Lumos, catering to the IoT space, was founded in order to automate any electrical appliance into smart appliances that could be controlled via a smartphone in order to make your home a 'smart home'. After shutdown, one of the main reasons they cited leaving the market was because of lack of expertise in the field.

5 DoneByNone

Gurgaon based online fashion store for women

DoneByNone.com, which was founded in 2011, went inactive in late 2014 with an apology on Facebook. Earlier that same year, DoneByNone was seen hitting the ten million mark in its overall sales. So why go inactive? The Facebook post mentioned that they had let down their customers and had been going through a tough time, and that they were working to fix it. That was the last piece of communication received from the company. The founders were later seen moving on to newer projects. The exact reason of DoneByNone's inactiveness is still unknown, but various reports suggest that the company's existing investors were no longer interested in the venture.

6 TalentPad

Having founders from IIT and IIM, TalentPad (earlier known as TalentAuction) aimed to find candidates for its client companies by incorporating a curated recruitment marketplace model. Despite raising investment in October 2014 from Helion Venture Partners, and the acquisition of a rival - OptimizedBits, to boost its analytical capabilities, TalentPad joined the list of dead startups less than a year later. The reason for their shutdown, according to the founders, is that they were unable to scale their business for a market as big as the one they were dealing in.

INDIAN STARTUPS THAT FIZZLED OUT

A NUMBER OF STARTUPS EMERGE EVERYDAY BUT NOT MANY CAN FACE THE HEAT. HERE ARE THE ONES THAT DISSIPATED WITH TIME.

BY NIKHIL PUNJABI nikhil@digit.in