

1 Nokia 3310

You remember the Nokia 3310, don't you?

Those who had this, haven't been able to break or destroy it yet. Moreover, the Nokia 3310 was full of incredible features for its time, the best of which is of course, Snake! Nokia sold some 126 million units of this phone, and it was followed by the Nokia 3315, another iconic device.

2 Nokia 1100

If smartphone OEMs are indeed yearning for better battery life, this is the phone to look for. The iconic device was one of the best in that respect. Nokia launched this phone, back in 2003, and Wikipedia says it has since sold 250 million units of this. It may not actually have sold as much, but it was still popular.

3 Moto Razr V3i

On a personal note, would you disagree if we called this the best looking phone ever made? The Razr V3i had 8x digital zoom, which was kind of a big deal at the time. You could also add an external SD card upto 1GB.

4 Nokia N-Gage

The Nokia N-Gage and N-Gage QD weren't very successful products, but they are iconic for being the original phone for gamers. The N-Gage gave rise to the N-Gage platform, which was later used in the Nokia N81 smartphone, based on its own Symbian OS. We know of many, us included, who still remember this phone, fondly.

5 Nokia 9500

From gaming to business, Nokia once had a phone for everyone. If the 1100 and 3310 were consumer devices, and the N-Gage a gamer's, then the 9500 Communicators, were meant for the business user. Equipped with a QWERTY keyboard, this wasn't a device you buy for entertainment, although, it allowed plenty of that too. In fact, Nokia took its time to launch this one, but when it did, competitors were nowhere close.

A defining phone in everyone's Nokia handset journey, the 9500 Communicator was a trend-setter in so many ways, not least in its high productivity quotient. No phone came close to matching its prowess and unique allure. And combine it with the wide availability of the device, it was bound to be a sensational hit for everyone thirsty for a distinctive phone.

6 Nokia 6600

This odd looking device is perhaps the best known Nokia phone in India, after the 3310 and 1100. Symbian was slightly sluggish, but it had a decent camera for its time. It had an integrated voice recorder, supported Bluetooth connectivity, and an IR port. It had enough options for the tinkerers to enjoy it, and a personality that made others notice it too.

We remember a lot of college kids using flaunting this phone for its multimedia and productivity capabilities, back in the day. It's a special phone from a special era can't be forgotten.

15

TOP MOBILE PHONES OF THE PAST 15 YEARS

HERE'S A LOOK AT THE MOST UNIQUE PHONES OF THE PAST DECADE THAT DEFINED OUR MOBILE ADDICTION

BY PRASID BANERJEE
prasad@digit.in