If you've been observing recent trends, you'll notice that crowdfunding has become a phenomenon of sorts. Everything from TV shows to movies, clothes, gadgets, video games, you name it, it can be funded. All you need is a solid concept and the ability to convince the masses that you can pull it off. If the masses, i.e., the crowd think your idea is good enough, the money will start rolling in as you get more and more backers. The advantages here are many – backers get to personally suggest and give feedback regarding the product, and the risk involved for both sides is significantly lower. It's a great market to showcase product ideas and it comes as no surprise that it's a great avenue for game devs to pitch their concepts and ideas to the world. There have been several games that have been successfully crowdfunded and gone on to become really enjoyable. So here's a list of crowdfunded games that you should get your hands on when you can.
