It has been quite a while since the dawn of the millennium, 16 years to be precise. Much has occurred in that period – phones don't have buttons any more, there was a new Star Wars movie, our favorite comic book heroes have come alive and you can actually go out and catch Pokemon now. But perhaps what is more significant than all of the above is emergence of a new generation of people – the millennials.

Before you go up in arms – Yes, we are using the term millennial for a mindset, not for an age. This mindset has gone ahead and defined some of the biggest trends of the present day and have set a completely new (and sometimes incomprehensible) way of living. Sometimes, it is even difficult to tell whether the person you're interacting with is a millennial or not. On that note, it is really important to be able to identify a millennial when you see one, and who knows, you might be one in your heart as well! Here's how you can identify a millennial.

You literally cannot live without your smartphone

You sleep with it, you wake up to check it in the middle of the night, you take it into the shower, and you've been caught multiple times in the classroom with it. Congratulations, one of the most evident identifiers of being a millennial is strong within you. There is probably an app for everything on your phone and your version of apocalypse involves a dead battery or no Wi-Fi.

The emergence of smartphones was bang in the middle of an average millennial's lifetime, with most of them gradually replacing toys and action figures with buttons they could mash and screens they could tap. It is no surprise that an average kid today can handle the latest smartphones with much greater ease than an average adult.

Your vocabulary includes rekt, fam, lol, rofl, ttyl and fml

Shakespeare has probably been rolling in his grave for quite a while now. When texting arrived on the scene, it didn't have too many restrictions and SMS plans were quite generous. Sending a text that just says "hi" wasn't a creepy thing to do.

When the restrictions hit, people turned to millennials for a solution. Lo and behold! Therein emerged the lols, the rofls, the ttyls and the rekt. The apparent ease and the microseconds saved with this practice spread like wildfire and even got widely adopted
