

of Fire and face off against dwarves. Cross oceans and be the first to settle on a new land or guide a group of survivors across the desert in the sweltering sun. Battle for Wesnoth is a turn-based tactical strategy game. There's sixteen full length campaigns to enjoy and over two hundred different unit types to play with, with sixteen races and seven different factions. There's also multiplayer and co-op support. The game has a large community of dedicated fans who create custom maps and mods and there's support for creating your own scenarios and campaigns. The game was first released back in 2003 and they're finally bringing it to Steam. The game is free to play and you can download and play the game right away at

Marty Thinks 4th Dimensionally

This game is an isometric 3D puzzle platformer. You control a small robot named MRT-I, or Marty, in his quest to find, or rather, rebuild his creator. Marty is able to time travel and uses past versions of himself to help himself. Yes, it sounds complicated to us too. The game takes place in small areas where you will face enemies and other platforming challenges. To overcome these challenges you need make use of a variety of special abilities including of course, the ability to time travel. You can use the time travel ability to work with up to 5 copies of your past self. The game requires you to make proper use of the time travel mechanic to be able to go on to the next level. The game has several boss fights as well as a multiplayer mode where you can play against an opponent in an arena. However, there's a twist, after 30 seconds the match resets but your past versions remain, so instead of a 1v1 it's a 2v2 now with the past versions of yourself also in the fray. This continues every 30 secs so it goes on to a 3v3, then a 4v4 and so on. Definitely looks like a fun game, and there's a demo out too so you can try out for yourself.

Time Golf Squad

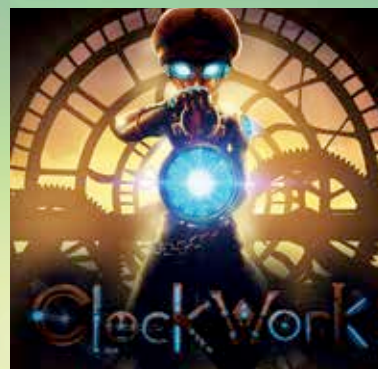

Never thought we'd ever see a golf inspired RPG but here it is, Time Golf Squad, an RPG action game with golf-inspired gameplay. In Time Gold Squad you take control of four time travelling warriors who're really good at golf for some reason. Anyway, gold your way through the levels and go deeper into space and even into the dark recesses of the human mind. Oh and avoid hazards and make sure you stay under par, because golf. The game has RPG elements, so obviously the four heroes are specialised in some way or the other with some special power or ability. Locations are unique as you're restricted by neither place nor time and there's a bunch of extra stuff to do. Boss battles seem to be a really in thing these days, so they've got those as well. They're even planning multiplayer for future releases but can we handle that much golf?

Clockwork

Clock is a puzzle-platformer, like oh so many of the titles mentioned here, sorry if puzzle platformers aren't your thing. Also time control seems to be a recurring theme in Steam Greenlight these days. Clockwork tells the story of one Atto, a lonely mech boy who can control time. So yea, there's a bunch of places where you need to use his time-bending powers to get through a level. It's a steampunk-inspired theme, so if you're into that you'll love the visuals on this game. It does look rather nice. Again, they've boss battles in here too. Man people really love boss battles these days. Must be a Dark Souls thing.

GAMES YOU CAN STILL VOTE FOR!

The games we just covered have already been Greenlit, so they'll be making their way to the Steam stores sooner or later. Here are some games that you can still vote for on Steam Greenlight if they tickle your fancy! And who knows, maybe your vote will help them make it on to Steam as well!

Asura

This is your chance to take on the Daeva empire in this rogue-like hack 'n' slash game. Asura is loosely based on the Indian mythos; assume the role of Asura, the demon incarnate, and obliterate all who dare come in your way. The
