

IdeaCentre Y710 Cube

It seems everyone wants to have their Hollywood star on the compact gaming PC boulevard. The latest entrant is Lenovo with their IdeaCentre Y710 Cube, and they also plugged in an AIO gaming system called the IdeaCentre AIO Y910 as well. The internal components are the same as we saw in HP's Omen X desktop with an Intel Core i7 Skylake processor, NVIDIA's GTX 1080 GPU, 32GB of DD4 RAM and a hybrid storage including a 2TB HDD and 256GB SSD. So, the hardware is the same, how do we know which one is better? Well, objectively, the cooling performance will be key, considering the compact size of the chassis and components held inside so close to each other. The design and colour scheme is a highly subjective topic and at first look, it looks like an alien spaceship. This is yet again, another gaming product confirming how this alien form of design is still a thing among manufacturers, not that we are complaining. The Y710 Cube also comes with a GTX 1070 configuration but the starting price of $1,299 will definitely raise our eyebrows. It's a powerful machine capable of handling VR and 4k gaming. But it's too soon to comment on the compact form factor PCs unless we get to see their cooling performance. It's set to launch sometime in October.

Gemio Band

When you observe an increasing number of posts saying "EDM is love, EDM is life", you know it's time to cash in on the craze and make some money. Pandering to this generation, Gemio has launched an interesting smartband that changes according to your mood, sound, movement and also charges wirelessly. The band has embedded a panel of LED lights beneath, capable of creating millions of lights and patterns. All of the crazy lighting effects can be controlled by the MyGemio smartphone app. Not just manual control, the lights respond to your movement and touch. This makes it a really bad choice for covert operations. The possibilities are endless with how you can program the lights. You can assign colours to your friends and the band will light up with that colour when they are around. A great tool to notify you to leave immediately when the person you owe money is around. The app lets you join Channels of your favourite artist or team so that it can light up according to a specific event occurring in that Channel. So the next time Man Utd wins a match in the Premier League, your band will light up red, and we do hope that it keeps lighting up every week until the end of the season. You can buy the band for about $49.
