

Caviar Pokémon Go

Pokémon Go has taken over the world like a plague. Although the mobile game hasn't officially launched in several regions, it hasn't stopped people from finding a work-around to play it. With both nostalgia and curiosity playing an important role in its popularity, we are seeing a lot of merchandise pop into the market. It was just a matter of time for a luxury product to get the Pokémon Go makeover. And here we are, with Caviar's Pokémon Go case for the iPhone 6s. The case has a Titanium-engraved back and in the middle there's a gold-plated Pokéball logo. Priced at an insane ₹1.8 lakh, it might seem like too much at first, but there's only 77 of them and you also get a dedicated Pokémon Go account with the maximum amount of Poké-coins. Caviar will start selling in Russia as soon as the game officially launches in the country. If you wanted to dab your Pokémon Go adventures with a hint of luxury, well here's something worth considering.

Vertu Aster Chevron

Vertu has been holding the flag for luxury smartphone manufacturing for several years now and we've regularly been bringing you the latest from them. And this time, they have included a really powerful camera module never seen before in any other smartphone. Housing a 13-megapixel Has-selblad camera, we're expecting some really high quality pictures on this phone and we would love to get our hands on one. Apart from the camera and the distinct Chevron design, the internals is where it disappoints us. Powered by a Snapdragon 801 CPU seems like a bad move considering they're using an old generation CPU rather than the latest one. But then again, the 801 isn't that bad and it can handle current apps pretty well. One of the premium features in this phone are the ringtones which are composed and performed by the London Symphony Orchestra.

Other premium experiences, such as the concierge service are also available, which is across every Vertu phone. Available in several colour options, the phone will set you back by a staggering ₹2.8 lakh.

APP WATCH

Edelweiss WealthPack

A good money saving tool is always appreciated. And even with the large number of money management apps out there, WealthPack stands out due to its attention to detail in its categories and subcategories with its insightful analytics. It can even track your bills and show trends over them. Like other apps in this category, this one can also read your SMS inbox. But we can definitely say that this one is especially good at it! It also tracks how much cash you should have, based on ATM withdrawals, which you can manually update with cash spent.

Play Store: <http://bit.ly/2bowtix>

AppyStore

Modern day parenting is laced with all kinds of technology. The sight of a parent holding a smartphone playing a nursery rhyme to distract their kid is not rare now. AppyStore is aimed at making that easier while helping the kid learn something. The app has a large number of content categories and the premium model also sends physical worksheets for the kid. All of the content is decided based on the age of the child. The parents dashboard shows the kid's performance in different aspects along with some parenting videos. Overall, it's a good option if a parent isn't against appy-fying parenthood.

Play Store: <http://bit.ly/2bzVJjp>

Mandala Colouring book by Colorfit

After all the apps trying to make working, studying, saving, parenting easier, here's one that is simply here to help you relieve some stress. The Mandala colouring is a simple colouring book application that lets you choose a pattern from several categories like geometric mandalas, flowers, animals and even pop art of various difficulties. You can simply fill colours like in MS Paint or you can choose type of tips like crayons, paint brushes, pencil colors and more. And once you are satisfied with your work, you can save it and share directly from the app to Facebook, Instagram, Google+, Twitter and more. Unleash your inner artist!

Play Store: <http://bit.ly/2buKZBg>