As of June 2016, Apple's AppStore hosted 2,000,000 apps. That's an extremely large number of possibly useful apps. Where giants such as Facebook, Google and Snapchat rule the regions, it feels daunting to jump into such a dense forest to pick out the juiciest berries. But that's why you have us, so we can do all the dirty work for you, right?

Documents 5

Price: Free

Ever desired a file manager on iOS? Developed by Readdle, Documents (currently in its fifth iteration) is both a robust and a reliable app to manage the contents of your device. The app provides documents and media viewer that supports a large number of file formats, which to be honest is a treat for iOS users. Other than viewing, deleting, copying and moving files, Documents also provides access to your cloud services along with an archiver, a web browser and capabilities to transfer files to and from a computer. Important pointers to note here though, due to how much iOS allows access to its system, Documents won't allow access to deep system files and also it won't become an alternative for iTunes to transfer files to its first party apps. Although you can use the in-built media viewer to completely ditch the Music and Videos app.

Unroll.Me

Price: Free

You create an account on a new website, use its services for a while, get enough of it and its utility fades for you. But you find out soon that the website isn't done with you yet and bombards you with news and update mails. It's a spot you find yourself in too often, every morning clearing tonnes of such mails. Even though you can unsubscribe to these services but who has the time to go to each of the websites and unsubscribe?

This is where Unroll.Me becomes a knight in the shining armor. The app lets you manage the horde of all the subscriptions related to your email accounts. You can unsubscribe, keep or even tell the app to add a subscription into a daily digest like feature which sends just one mail to you for all the subscriptions.
